Dear Friends:

In the fall our city and our country will celebrate an exciting milestone. This impressive marker is the 200th Anniversary of The English High School of Boston – the first public high school in America – a school founded when Thomas Jefferson and John Quincy Adams were alive.

Resilience, grit and determination are just a few words that describe the character of the students who have walked these halls since 1821.

This anniversary inspires us to re-examine our priorities and reminds us that there is no greater equalizer for opportunity than a strong and vibrant public education. Today, the times mandate that we double down on our commitment to provide this vital ladder to success for immigrants, first generation students and young people not born into families with suburban advantage. For two centuries, their drive for a better life has laid the foundation for a stronger Boston. I am living proof of that drive, not just to succeed but to give back and lead.

Please join me and invest in the future success of The English High School, a true national treasure as well as in our city's future competitiveness. I encourage you to become a corporate sponsor or an individual donor of the 200th Anniversary virtual event, Daring To Dream: Breaking Barriers, The Legacy We Share and support the courage and promise of these worthy students.

The English High School shines a brilliant beacon of hope at the crossroads of equality and opportunity. It was true 200 years ago and it is even truer today.

Sincerely,

Kim Janey

ENGLISH HIGH SCHOOL TODAY englishhs.org

Since 1821, the mission of English High School has been to challenge each student academically while fostering an enduring commitment to honor, achievement, and service to humanity. As the school community has evolved to meet the demands of the 21st century, we seek today to support our students' social and emotional development and growth, challenge them to meet rigorous academic standards, and provide them with opportunities to explore career development avenues that will lead them to a rich and fulfilling post secondary life in which they are engaged members of society and advocates for a more just world.

Head of School Caitlin Murphy has been deeply committed to the school first as a teacher and then an administrator for over 12 years and is grateful to be partnering with the dedicated EHS Association. Together they are counting on community support to commit the resources needed to advance academic, arts, science and sports opportunities for the often overlooked but very deserving student body.
